Alain Robert: the human 'Spiderman'

Alain Robert is a 47-year-old Frenchman. He has climbed the world's tallest buildings –including the Eiffel Tower, Paris, One Canada Square in Canary Wharf, London, and the Empire State Building in New York. In 2009, he finally succeeded in climbing the 88-floor, 452-metre Petronas Towers in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, the third tallest building in the world. It was his third attempt. Robert climbs buildings without permission, and he has often been arrested for climbing them, but that doesn't stop him. He was held by the police in Malaysia after his climb, and he could have gone to prison for six months.

Robert has become so famous that he is often asked by companies to climb as part of advertising campaigns. In 2003, he climbed the National Bank of Abu Dhabi with a crowd of 100,000 people watching. In the same year he climbed the Lloyd's of London building for the first time – wearing a 'Spiderman' costume, because he was paid by Sky Movies to advertise the TV premiere of the Spiderman film.

Although this is a very dangerous extreme sport, Robert has only had one accident while climbing high structures. It happened when he was sitting on traffic lights, having his photo taken for a magazine. But he had more serious accidents when he was rock climbing, before he started climbing buildings. In 1982, he fell 15 metres and broke both his arms and his nose and was in a coma for five days. He was told he would never climb again, but within a year he was climbing again.
